FUND MANAGER COMMENT

October was a very turbulent month with renewed volatility in the equity markets. This month, Italy will have been in the spotlight with the presentation of its highly controversial budget to the European Commission, which, for the first time in its history, rejected a Member State's budget. Despite a reassuring communication from the Italian government, the debate on the budget continues. Still in Europe, attempts to negotiate Brexit still seem fierce, but discussions could lead to an agreement by the end of the year. On the other side of the Atlantic, Donald Trump's protectionist war continued to make waves in European equity markets, but a meeting is planned with China in late November. On the political side, the mid-term elections could ease tensions if Trump emerged weakened.

In terms of sector allocation, consumer goods (-12.6%) penalized our portfolio, with in particular the strong underperformance over the month of automotive equipment manufacturers. On the other hand, our overweight position in utilities (+1.06%) and our good stock selection in the sector were favourable.

As regards to values, Acerinox (-19.9%) and Prysmian (-14.5%) are among the worst contributors to the fund's performance over the month. Spanish steelmaker Acerinox published very good figures for the third quarter of 2018, above expectations, but the market remained focused on a potential decline in activity at the end of the year due to macroeconomic uncertainties and lower commodity prices. On the side of Prysmian, the Italian cablemaker, there was good news this month: the completion of the Western Link project, which had encountered some technical problems in recent months. This good news, which significantly reduces uncertainty about the company, was quickly forgotten by the market.

As for the few positive contributors this month, the Dutch optician GrandVision (+5.4%) published solid quarterly results enabling it to confirm its 2018 objectives while anticipating a favourable trend at the end of the year. Despite a slightly disappointing quarter, Valmet expects an improvement in the fourth quarter, driven by a good level of order intake and improved margins.
